With we can have some stories of practical games, such as "unfaithful husbands and common knowledge". They have implications and are very interesting.

Drew is a really excellent TA. He listens actively and makes an effort to ensure that his explanations add value to the student. He's incredibly thorough in his answers and I really appreciate that as well.

Drew is great at clarifying what a question is really trying to get at, especially when that question is from Rubinstein's book. He is helpful without giving answers away, though I think most of us would've appreciated a bit more of a push in the right direction with some of Rubinstein's problems.

With the Rubinstein part of the course in particular, we know it's not helpful to anyone for you to just give answers away, but spending a bit more time coming up with hints that can at least help us get started would be great. Some of the problems are simply too confusing to tackle without a nudge in the right direction.

Drew tries his best to answer my question. If he cannot come up with the solution immediately, he would get back to me later with his thoughts.

I noticed that every time Drew would bring a hand written note with him in the TA session. It would be nice if Drew can scan it and post it to Sakai.

I didn't go to the TA's office hours because there was no need. The TA addressed questions during TA session times and made himself available for questions afterwards, which was enough for me. Drew's sessions were very helpful; solving problems together was extremely helpful for preparing for the exams. I may miss a lecture but i would not miss a TA session. If there was a question that pondered about together during the session, Drew made sure to follow-up on it by emailing us afterwards, which I appreciate a lot.
